Chairing the meeting of the Council of ministers, President Tebboune underlined with bitterness the behaviours of some citizens who make people believe that Covid-19 is just a myth with political purposes, expressing his astonishment at such irresponsibility while thousands of deaths are everyday reported worldwide, including the most developed countries, said the communiqué of the Council of ministers.

President of the Republic ordered to “harden sanctions against all those who contravene, individually or collectively, the prevention measures,” instructing Prime minister to “study the measures to take with the scientific committee for monitoring the progress of corona virus pandemic to decide on the action to be taken in the next few days to break the chain of infection and contain its sources.”

President of the Republic has once again asked minister of Health, Population and Hospital Reform to “resort to the plane made available to his department in order to be immediately and at any time on site to check the information relating to the real or fake inadequacies published here and there, in order to reassure citizens and to cut rumors and other false information off.”

After instructing minister of Health to “establish infection statistics in every province and to deal with them with further realism,” President of the Republic pointed out that “the fight against the pandemic is a collective responsibility (State, institutions, civil society and individuals) throughout the national territory because it is a matter of, he added, preserving the citizen’s life and integrity.”

He also ordered to “keep land, sea and air borders closed until God frees us from this scourge”, said the communiqué.

Previously, the Council of ministers followed the contribution of the minister of Health who broached the progress of the health situation in the country, in all its aspects, in the light of the fresh outbreak of the pandemic worldwide.

“We are in a real race against the clock to build a non-rent economy that would improve Treasury revenues, create jobs for young people and reduce imports to preserve foreign exchange reserves,” the president of the Republic said, speaking to the members of the Government.

The Algerian "people will judge you based on the conformity of your words and deeds, so be an example of sincerity, dedication and selflessness, and on the eve of the Independence Day celebrations, always remember that whatever your sacrifices are, they will always be less than any drop of pure bloodshed by the martyrs of the Glorious Liberation War and even of national duty after independence," he said.

Referring to the scope of the latest cabinet reshuffle with the creation of major ministries directly linked to citizens' daily life, President Tebboune instructed a number of ministers to prepare roadmap and submit it for examination.

In this regard, the Head of the State instructed the minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to prepare the specifications for the Office for the Development of Industrial Agriculture in Saharan lands. The Minister of Transport has been instructed to review transport sectors, in all its forms, by optimizing all the means available to boost domestic air traffic, and allow Algeria to regain its righteous place in the field of maritime transport.

The maritime fleet needs to be reinforced with a view to ensuring the transport of passengers and goods, from and to Algeria, previously ensured by foreign companies and cost huge amounts of money, said a communiqué of the Council of Ministers.

In addition, the Minister of Energy Transition and Renewable Energies has been instructed to focus, in his program, on renewable energy production operations capable of being implemented on the ground and to choose pilot provinces for the generalization of solar energy fueled public lighting across the country.

Libyan crisis settlement: Growing convergence of views on political solution

ALGIERS - The tendency to the convergence of views on a political solution to Libya's crisis is growing at the regional and international levels as the diplomatic efforts are intensified to restore peace in this country in the grip of violence since 2011.

The last sign of convergence on a political process in Libya was when Chairman of the Presidential Council of Libya's Government of National Accord (GNA) Fayez Al-Sarraj and special representative and acting chief of the United Nations Support Mission in Libya (UNSMIL) Stephanie Williams broached in their meeting Saturday, in Rome, the latest developments of the situation in Libya and UN efforts to resume the political process there.

The two officials expressed their agreement on the need to resume the political process in Libya "on the basis of the conclusions of the Berlin Conference and the resolution 2510 of the Council of Security in order to reach a comprehensive settlement in Libya likely to preserve this country's sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity," said a communiqué of GNA.

Al-Sarraj who held talks with Giuseppe Conte emphasized "the impossibility of resolving militarily the Libyan crisis," stressing the need to "work on political path which ensures the stability in accordance with the Security Council resolutions and the results of the Berlin Conference."

In this respect, the European Union has once again underlined its attachment to the settlement of the Libyan crisis as part of "the process conducted by the United Nations" and following the recommendations of the Berlin Conference on Libya.

UNSMIL pointed out that a "political solution" to the Libyan crisis remains within easy reach and that it remains "as always," ready to organize a full open political process and led by the Libyans."

UNSMIL calls on the Libyan sides to engage rapidly and constructively talks of the joint military Commission to reach a lasting ceasefire agreement.

The African Union Commissioner for Peace and Security Smail Chergui affirmed last week that "AU supports and encourages any initiative based on dialogue and national reconciliation for a lasting solution to the crisis."

In this regard, he said that the Algerian initiative for the settlement of the crisis in Libya, given its membership in the High Level Committee as well as AU Contact Group on Libya, "has all elements of success."
