New law on hydrocarbons: drafting of implementing texts completed, says Arkab

ALGIERS - The Ministry of Energy has completed the drafting of the implementing texts relative to the new Law on Hydrocarbons, which is expected to attract more foreign investors, said Energy Minister Mohammed Arkab on Thursday.

"These texts will soon be submitted to the Government, the Council of Ministers and the two chambers of Parliament for approval," said the Minister before the members of the Finance and Budget Committee of the National People's Assembly (APN- Lower House), as part of the review of draft bill on 2017 Budget Regulation.

These new texts which will complete the Law on Hydrocarbons approved late 2019 will constitute a comprehensive legal basis in a view to attract foreign investors, in compliance with international standards.

Under this Law and its implementing texts, Algeria ambitions to boost its oil and gas output, said the minister, stressing that tangible alternatives were needed in order to encourage hydrocarbon investments within a period not exceeding seven years.

Arkab said that the exploited surface of the national mining domain in the hydrocarbon sector does not exceed 38% of its total area estimated at 1.5 million km<sup>2</sup>, which requires more investment in the unexploited areas.

With international oil companies hesitating to come in Algeria because of the legal system, it was necessary to adopt a new hydrocarbon law that would prompt foreign investments, added Arkab.

Since last January, a significant number of memoranda of understanding have been concluded with major oil companies, he said.

development amid the growing deterioration of natural capacities," said the minister who recalled that Algeria "very early realized the impact of desertification, which led to take the measures likely to fight against this phenomenon through the revival of the post-independence reforestation program, including the Green Barrier in the 70s".

Covid-19: President Tebboune urges developing countries to defend their peoples' aspirations

ALGIERS - President of the Republic Abdelmadjid Tebboune urged Wednesday the developing countries to carry out their role as defender of their peoples' aspirations and basic rights in the light of the major foreseeable changes in the architecture of the international relations, as a result of the unprecedented repercussions of the Covid-19 pandemic.

In his video conference speech at the China-Africa extraordinary Summit on the solidarity against Covid-19, President Tebboune said that the current crisis of the new coronavirus "isn't only a health crisis because of the challenges imposed by its unprecedented repercussions at the socio-economic levels and which augur major changes in the architecture of the international relations."

"This situation will certainly have a great impact on the global governance system in the future," affirmed President of the Republic reiterating, in this regard, the importance of implementing "a multilateral action system enabling the nations and peoples to express their aspirations, raise their concerns and strengthen their role in the face of nascent challenges."

This equation will help achieve the expected objectives at the service of the development, stability and descent living in Africa and in the world, he said.

While broaching the relations between Africa and China, President Tebboune pointed out that these relations have reached, in the last few decades, phases rich in solidarity and cooperation, welcoming the continuation of this solidarity and mutual support with the spread of the Covid-19 pandemic.

For its part, he added, “Algeria was among the first countries to express its full solidarity with China in the face of this difficult situation while calling that the evaluation of the situation by the international community be objective and far from any politicization.”

Western Sahara: Spain must work to end colonialism

BRUSSELS - Deputies of the European Parliament called Wednesday the Spanish Government, in a letter sent to the Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez, to speed up the decolonization process in Western Sahara and assume its historical and legal responsibilities towards the Sahrawi people.

The European MPs said in a letter that the recent decision of the Supreme Court which establishes that the fact of being born in Western Sahara before 1975 doesn't give the right to the Spanish nationality of origin, is “another denial from Spain towards its legal and historical responsibility and of its occupation for several years of Western Sahara which was its 53rd province and which had representatives in the legislature (Curtis), before being deliberately divided by Madrid and illegally given to Morocco,” as part of Madrid agreements of 14 November 1975.

The letter broached the historic decision of the International Court of Justice in 1975 which judged that Morocco doesn't have any sovereignty over the territory of Western Sahara, which was reaffirmed by the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs in 2002, in a different form, i.e. that “Madrid's arrangement didn't transfer the sovereignty of Western Sahara and didn't grant to any of the signatories the status of the administering power, a situation that Spain can't transfer unilaterally because it contradicts with the legal and political reality.”

The European MPs expressed their strong condemnation of this decision, which “reflects the clear political intentions against the Sahrawi people and the decolonization issue of Western Sahara,” demanding that “the Prime minister takes the responsibility of this phase and takes all the measures to respond to it, starting with the efforts aimed at establishing high-level diplomatic relations with the Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic (SADR) and the granting of the Spanish nationality to the descendants of the former Spanish colony (Western Sahara)...”
